You can use a companion to level up a character and advance him up to a certain point without the character having to do any work. The companion gives experience to the player and characters, and the player can use these to level up the companion. This feature is not for use with the Player Profiles feature. This companion will not update player status. For more information on compatible version, click on this link: - New monsters and spells for the Savage Worlds fantasy setting - 100 new Edges - increase a character's ability scores - Dwarf-only adventure - Tutorial covers equipment, food, drinks, tools, undead, NPCs, rules, and a brief description of the Savage Worlds system Note: The FFG Companion is ONLY compatible with the Savage World rules and system. If you run the D&D 3rd edition character/monster creation system, this companion will not work with your game. Copyright 2011, Fantasy Flight Games EDIT: Added 2.12.10 First patch released to fix some of the issue with the Companion. This patch removes the Text Input option from the General Options, as that feature is no longer supported. Thanks for the reports of the issues, and as always, any recommendations for how we can improve the program are welcome. Now that Fantasy Grounds is finally joining the league of publishers who understand that online audio/video services can be transformed into true gaming apps, why not unleash the full powers of FGC? I mean, seriously, how many other programs actually let you talk to your players via a mic? Fantastic! I wish there was a way to interact with the companion when it's off screen. There's a 15 minute plus wait time before the player even realizes the companion is off screen. It would be nice to talk to it while it's invisible. It would be really cool if there was some sort of overlay you could mouse over to bring it back. Checked out the documentation and the Savage Worlds companion. Looks awesome. I'm seriously going to have to try it out. Sarcasm aside, I've been looking for a new ruleset for my current group (old school Dungeons & Dragons game), and this looks like it has what I've been looking for.

such a case is, that when the evidence makes out a prima facie case against the accused, the jury shall acquit him, unless the evidence which ought to be given on the part of the crown for the purpose of establishing the fact, be shown by evidence sufficient to satisfy a reasonable man of the guilt of the accused, on the whole of the evidence. "Thus the function of the judge is to determine whether, on the evidence produced, the jury can with reason be convinced of the guilt of the accused. The scale of justice is not a fine one, as all offences which are not popular are liable to error, and when the jury bring in a verdict of guilt it is not to be overthrown, unless the circumstances are such as to shock the conscience." [1] "It is not necessary that there should be evidence of a conspiracy to commit the felony with which the accused is charged. If, in a given case, some conspiracy has been proved, the conspiracy will be presumed to have been entered into to accomplish the offense charged. Conspiracy is a charge against which the accused, if innocent, can offer no defense." "A person accused of a substantive crime cannot be convicted on a charge of conspiracy where the felony charged is incapable of being committed without the actual participation of the accused. Conspiracy, as applied to substantive crimes, is a charge which the accused may insist upon as to himself, and not a charge against which evidence introduced to prove the commission of another crime may be used. Even though a person is not entitled to raise the issue of conspiracy, proof of the commission of the crime charged cannot be made contingent upon proof that he was a member of a conspiracy."
